OVERVIEW

A sustained period of political and institutional progress reflects a growing global business and investment interest in Somalia. The country completed a transitional process a decade ago, by establishing non-transitional government for the first time since the start of the civil war in 1990.

Since then, Somalia has been on a recovery course. Each year, the country has witnessed sustained political stability, advances in the overall security situation, and a significant social-economic transformation. Successive Somalia federal governments have pursued transformative economic policy reforms that broadened the government tax base and enhanced tax administration, resulting in a rise in domestic revenue.

Despite the recent triple shocks of the COVID-19 pandemic, droughts, and locust infestation, Somalia's economy has rebounded with a projection of 2.5 to 2.8 percent in 2022 and reach 3.2 percent in 2023. Gross Domestic Product (GDP) growth continues to be urban-based, consumption-driven and fueled by diaspora remittances, investments, and assistance from development partners.

The Somalia government's aggressive economic reforms to bolster the confidence of the Somali people, foreign investors as well as Somalia's international partners, have also allowed Somalia to re-establish ties with global financial institutions, including the World Bank and the IMF, and focus on accelerating the Debt relief and access to credit to sustain Somalia's economic growth and development. This resolve is also based on the government's desire to shift from relying on humanitarian aid and limited development funds and instead access Foreign Direct Investments that would transform the country.

Moreover, there is an enormous global interest to tap on Somalia's economic potential and natural resources with various countries and international firms seeking to undertake investment ventures. In the last few years, economic activities have doubled including the registration of over 3,000 businesses, increased partnerships between domestic and foreign investors, a visible infrastructure development, real estate and construction steady growth.

In parallel, the federal government of Somalia has sustained FDI, business and trade regulatory and institutional climate reforms that reflects both the domestic market trends and, regional as well as international demands in order to synchronized and connect Somalia with the international investments, and trade systems.
